Te Pouhere Kōrero: Sacred Time

On 28 March at the National Library in Wellington, whānau of Te Pouhere Kōrero gather to wānanga – to make time and space to discuss their collective work. And we warmly invite you to join us.

5.30 for 6 p.m. start, in Te Ahumairangi Foyer (ground floor)

National Library Te Puna Mātauranga o Aotearoa
70 Molesworth Street, Wellington

Welcome: Paul Diamond for the National Library
Professor Damon Salesa for the Judith Binney Trust

Panel Discussion: Māori History – Sacred Time
Aroha Harris, Arini Loader, Nēpia Mahuika, Peter Meihana

Launching Te Pouhere Kōrero 10: Professor Rawinia Higgins

This is a celebration of many years working together as Māori historians. It also marks the publication of the journal Te Pouhere Kōrero 10, along with the digital release of all ten volumes of the journal in the New Zealand History Collection.

The panel will discuss the central themes of Te Pouhere Kōrero 10. They bring a unique range of perspectives to bear on questions concerning the past, the study of history, and how it might be most interestingly, fulsomely, and ethically taught.

Pupuritia ngā kupu kua whakarērea mai a ngā tīpuna.

About Te Pouhere Kōrero

Te Pouhere Kōrero (www.tepouherekorero.org.nz) operates as a broad collective of Māori colleagues interested in history. It was established in November 1992, at an inaugural hui convened at Rongopai Marae near Gisborne, Aotearoa New Zealand. Te Pouhere Kōrero – Māori History, Māori People is our official journal, focusing on Māori and Indigenous history.

The first volume of the journal was published in 1999. All ten volumes have now been digitised (with support from Creative New Zealand and Te Kura Tangata Arts at the University of Auckland); they are available in the New Zealand History Collection (www.bwb.co.nz/collections), which can be found in all subscribing libraries (including public, tertiary and school libraries).

Refreshments will be served. Nau mai, haere mai – this is a public event, no RSVP needed. Contact info@judithbinneytrust.org.nz for more information.

This celebration is co-hosted by Te Pouhere Kōrero and the Judith Binney Trust, with the support of the National Library of New Zealand Te Puna Mātauranga o Aotearoa.
